Artifacts belonging to the prehistoric Hadza people, who lived and hunted in northern Tanzania in the Rift Valley at the time, have been found. The archaic stone tools, made of baked volcanic rocks, were found during an archaeological dig at a cave close to the border with Kenya. I'm not talking about doing it for abuse purposes. Simply put, the outbound SMTP does not affect our customers, but it does send data to a blacklist. Is there a way to monitor this data? A: Here is the definition of the term monitoring outbound email from Google Search: monitor - verb (monitor) : to watch carefully over a period of time or to keep track of closely or closely Monitoring also includes responding to abuse complaints, complaints, etc. A: Based on my experience, since you're not doing anything illegal with the information, it doesn't seem like you have any valid reason to monitor it. I'd be tempted to say you aren't really monitoring it, but you could (in some way) say that you are. In the end, some form of monitoring would probably be a good thing, but I'd probably just leave it as some obscurity that you can all laugh about.
