Freeware AutoCAD Product Key is available as freeware as well as in an entry-level version and in an unlimited-usage version. The AutoCAD freeware comes in three different editions, each of which offer varying levels of functionality, depending on the user's needs. AutoCAD 2007's free Starter Edition is most commonly used by new users, as it contains basic 2D, 3D, and surface editing capabilities. In AutoCAD 2008, this version of the software is referred to as the Plus Edition. In 2007, AutoCAD 2011 used to have an AutoCAD Freeware edition, but this was discontinued in AutoCAD 2016 and AutoCAD LT 2016. AutoCAD LT 2011 is the last AutoCAD to support the Plus Edition, as this edition has not been produced since 2016. The free limited-edition, AutoCAD LT 2011, was discontinued in 2016. AutoCAD LT is now sold separately as AutoCAD LT

2016. Although AutoCAD LT 2016 does not support Plus Edition, it does support the then discontinued AutoCAD LT 2012, released in 2010, which was based on the same architecture as Plus Edition. Other AutoCAD's long-running competitor, AutoCAD LT 2011, has not received any updates since 2016. Customization AutoCAD LT 2011 is the last major release of AutoCAD to support the Plus Edition. AutoCAD used to be able to be "modified" for a price (a fee) to obtain a license from Autodesk. The Plus edition is a much newer technology and the ability to "modify" the file to gain additional functionality is not offered. While users can make many changes to the program directly, most changes have to be made through programming. An example is the "elevation" of a line or surface. As opposed to manually raising or lowering points on a line or surface, AutoCAD LT 2011 offers the ability to use the elevation slider which provides a more precise method. In AutoCAD 2007, once the user clicks on a part of the screen, there are many ways to reach the current part. For example, in the drawing area, the user could press the "L" key to navigate to the left, the "C" key to navigate to the center, and the "R" key to navigate to the right. In addition to these methods, users could also select one of the context menu items such as View

At least 686 people have been killed and 1,033 others injured in a series of bomb attacks in and around Damascus, Syrian government officials say. Several of the blasts happened during rush hour on Monday and an estimated 10,000 people are now trapped in the city centre after the street bombing and suicide blasts, said state television. A suicide bomber rammed an explosives-laden car into a checkpoint in Damascus's suburbs at 8am local time, said the station. That car then blew up after two security officials were killed, said state television. The road to a government building and a military base in the mostly Christian Yarmouk district, south of the capital, was closed to traffic by a car bomb which went off near a road junction, it added.
