a chronic, low-grade, non-infectious inflammatory process, by examining its effect on alleviating the systemic and local inflammation. Sprague-Dawley rats exposed to COPD developed the systemic and local inflammation, evidenced by lung inflammation score and histology, the systemic (plasma) and local (lung tissue) cytokines, at 6th weeks of exposure. The local and systemic inflammation significantly increased in COPD-rats and were reduced by vivagel™. Vivagel™ efficiently attenuated the chronic cigarette smoke (CS)-induced chronic inflammatory processes in COPD-rats, evidenced by levels of plasma and local inflammatory cytokines. Vivagel™ was also effective in preventing and relieving lung tissue injury in COPD. The histopathological analysis demonstrated that the lung cells of rats exposed to COPD underwent morphological changes and remodeling; a phenomenon evident in an increased mean linear intercept (MLI), reduced alveolar density (AD) and increased alveolar wall thickness (AWT). These changes were also improved by vivagel™. As the combustion of tobacco products causes chronic inflammation and an increase in systemic inflammatory mediators that are associated with COPD, the natural way in which vivagel™ protects the chest and lungs from inflammation in a rat model of COPD is promising and potentially could be used to reduce the risk of cardiovascular disease (CVD).2012 was a big year of transitions for me. I had my first child in the fall, which was a major life transition. I had been writing a memoir
