This article is a complete guide to Photoshop. If you already know how to use Photoshop, you can skip to the next section. When to Use Photoshop Before you start using Photoshop, there are several questions you must ask yourself about the image you're going to edit. Is it too dark? Is it too light? What are the primary colors in the subject? Colors Saturation, Hue, and Luminance Saturation affects the colors in the subject. Hue affects the colors in the subject, Luminance affects the actual brightness of the subject. Saturation When you work in Photoshop, you can manipulate the individual colors within a photo with the Saturation slider. The goal of this slider is to add or remove colors from the image. A color-balanced photo (with both vivid colors and neutral colors) should have less saturation. Hue The Hue slider is used to add or subtract color from the image. It works much like the Saturation slider, but instead of reducing the amount of color in the photo, it causes the colors in the photo to shift slightly, causing the photo to appear out of color balance. Luminance The luminance slider controls the actual brightness of the photo. Adjusting the luminance slider will change the exposure. It doesn't add or subtract color; it simply brightens or darkens the photo in the same way that an exposure slider does. A common misconception is that the slider called "Lightroom" is related to the luminance slider in Photoshop. While Lightroom can be used to open a RAW file and modify the luminance slider in Adobe Camera Raw, it can't change the luminance of the photo itself. Increasing the Saturation, Hue, and Luminance Using the Burn, Dodge, or Sponge tools With the Burn tool, click and drag to increase the saturation of the foreground color to a specific percentage, as in this example; With the Dodge tool, click and drag to decrease the saturation of the foreground color to a specific percentage, as in this example; With the Sponge tool, drag to create a creamy effect, as in this example; Alternatives to the Burn, Dodge, and Sponge tools are also available to enhance colors. The Sponge tool can be used to swap two colors, and the Color Replacement tool can be used to swap colors on specific areas of the image. The Color Replacement

The invention relates to a hydrogen filling station having a hydrogen generator, a hydrogen distributing device which is connected to a hydrogen distributor and to at least one hydrogen storage container, and a control unit, which controls the supply of hydrogen by the hydrogen generator to the hydrogen distributing device. Hydrogen filling stations which are used in motor vehicles and have a hydrogen generator and a hydrogen dispensing device are known for example from DE 100 61 561. A hydrogen tank is provided in the vehicle, which is connected to the hydrogen dispensing device via a pressure-equalizing line. The hydrogen dispensing device is connected to the hydrogen tank, and by way of a pressure-equalizing line, to a line in the hydrogen tank which has the final pressure, so that the hydrogen is released from the interior of the hydrogen tank into the dispensing device and then distributed in the vehicle. The hydrogen tank is connected to a tank line, which has a first branch, which leads to a hydrogen supplying device, and which has a second branch which leads to a pressure regulator, and the outlet of which is connected to the final pressure regulator via a pressure-equalizing line. A pressure-equalizing valve is arranged in the pressure-equalizing line. A hydrogen distributor, which has a hydrogen-filling line, is provided in the vehicle in addition to the hydrogen tank. The hydrogen-filling line connects the hydrogen tank and the hydrogen distributor. The hydrogen-filling line is connected via a pressure-equalizing line to a line in the hydrogen tank which has the final pressure. By means of this hydrogen-filling line, the hydrogen can be fed from the hydrogen tank into the hydrogen-filling line by way of a filling connection which is provided on the vehicle, and from there into the hydrogen distributor. According to this known arrangement, the second branch of the tank line is closed by a screw-on cap which is screwed onto the existing line when filling the vehicle. The screw-on cap must be removed again after refilling the hydrogen tank with hydrogen and repositioned on the line again. This is laborious, time-consuming, and expensive. It is therefore the object of the invention to provide a hydrogen filling station of the aforementioned type in which the hydrogen tank can be refilled with hydrogen as easily as possible.
