Preoperative evaluation of aortic root sclerosis as a risk factor for aortic dissection. Aortic root sclerosis (ARS) is an anomaly that predisposes to aortic dissection. The present study prospectively analyzed ARS as a risk factor for aortic dissection in 37 patients who underwent surgical resection for nonruptured infrarenal aortic disease.

The patients were divided into three groups according to the presence or absence of ARS. The group with no ARS had a mean age of 54 years, a male/female ratio of 1.8, a mean estimated blood loss of 633 mL, and a mean hospital stay of 4.3 days. The group with moderate ARS had a mean age of 58 years, a male/female ratio of 1.5, a mean estimated blood loss of 952 mL, and a mean hospital stay of 4.2 days. The group with severe ARS had a mean age of 56 years, a male/female ratio of 1.3, a mean estimated blood loss of 1331 mL, and a mean hospital stay of 5.5 days. The patients with severe ARS had a markedly increased risk of intraoperative bleeding compared with the other groups. The mean duration of follow-up was 51 months. Two patients (5.4%) in the no ARS group and none of the patients in the other two groups experienced an aortic dissection. The overall mortality rate was 9.7%, and there was no statistical difference between the three groups. Furthermore, in the group with moderate ARS, the rate of type A dissection was significantly higher (47%) than in the other groups (9.5% in the no ARS group and 7.4% in the group with severe ARS). Among patients with aortic dissection, those with moderate ARS had a high incidence of type A dissection. There was no increased mortality rate with ARS.--- src/nvtools.c.org
