That shouldÂ .Fire Code updates impact the restoration process A house fire in the 300 block of North Maple Street in Onalaska resulted in the loss of the entire second floor of the home. (Platte River Echo photo / William Keating). A burning structure in the 700 block of Coolidge Road in Oakdale entered the second phase of the restoration process March 5. (Platte River Echo photo / Joseph Wagner). The dangers and stress of a house fire are far from over, and a combined effort is needed to ensure its proper restoration so that the structure is able to be an asset to the public again. But with the fire code updates that came into effect on Jan. 1, the process requires a little more care and attention. "In order to protect the public, we have to do it a little more carefully," said Onalaska Fire Chief Ryan McGee. "We've had some fires that have been blown up in the roof, the contents of the home have been destroyed." Presently, the normal restoration process for a structure that has been substantially damaged by fire, involves firefighters pulling all of the fire
