if you are looking to buy a surfcam you better go to the surfcam dealer like dewalt. they carry a system with a spiral back and the latest optics. i've never seen a surfcam in the mini-max line and with all the other guys at dewalt having systems with more powerful optics (stuart comes to mind) you can understand why they don't make them. the original surfcam project was done by the little known company, kaiser. the story goes that a guy in the mid-west stopped by kaiser because the ships he was doing out in california needed a surfcam. the company was founded by kaiser and was named kaiser surfcam. kaiser surfcam was a big hit and eventually kaiser surfcam in the usa was taken over by the japanese company, nichi. the japanese surfcam became nichi surfcam i've never seen one on the street and that's because nichi surfcam is not even sold in the usa. i've had a few emails from guys asking me about buying the old surfcam from japan, but i haven't heard from anyone that has. the signtonic is only worth it if you can use them with the high quality upgrades. there are other companies that can supply you with upgrades for your signtonic. even though signtonics are the cheapest option they do not have the quality of the more popular high quality upgrades. i am not a huge fan of signtonic upgrades because they dont hold up over time and you have to make sure that you arent using any cheap ones because they are very easily damaged and they dont hold up as well. the only time ive ever seen signtonics actually hold up was when i put the high quality upgrades on my signtonic. every other time i have only seen them get broken. of course it is easier for them to have breakage because they are the cheapest of the three options out there.

There is an additional quick time video option. Just press the Q button on Surfcam and Q-Tick saves a Q-mike video of your last second saved after startup. Q-Tick is only available for the 16 bit model and is not viewable on the smaller 32 and 64 bit models. Surfcam's new streaming technology features an exceptionally easy and user friendly web based workflow. Traditionally, users have needed a tripod, mounts, cable, laptop, Wi-Fi connection, USB stick to enter data. With Surfcam web, users stream directly into the Canvas' in-context browser window. The new Surfcam Surf Studio v4 also features robust USB 2.0 support and multiple memory card slots. The Surf Studio Hub supports up to 128 minutes of Raw video and has 12 SD or Compact Flash (CF) memory card slots, which can take cards up to 32GB. The Surf Studio Hub can be powered either by an AC adaptor or by a long-lasting USB rechargeable battery. For many surfers I hear this is the best new version of Surfcam they have tried. Here is what Surfcam brought to the table this time around. Surfcam Lead Hardware Engineer Ravi Chandaraj says, "We spent a lot of time and effort on this release. We have updated the CamSite software to be more stable and more powerful. Along with that, we have changed the firmware of our new Micro-HDMI port for the SurfCamPlayer. This is a big deal because it should improve playback and streaming speed on your iPad or Samsung Galaxy. We have also re-engineered some of our internal components. The result of all these improvements is a system that is easier to use, more reliable, and more power efficient. Another significant improvement is that we now have the ability to capture a streaming video from the SurfCam Studio directly to your iPhone, iPod touch or iPad (iPad only). The video is compressed using Apple's H.264 codec, so you can view the video at 1080p resolution and playback up to 30 frames per second in real time.
