A series of 691 tumors treated by electron beam therapy from 1958 to 1979 is presented. The tumors were treated as a primary or a recurrence. The primary tumors were divided into groups according to the site of the tumor and its size. Data concerning the patient's age, sex, race, tumor histology, stage, and extent of disease and treatment were recorded. The treatment techniques, including the use of electron beam therapy, the beam energy, and the fractionation schedules were also documented. Pathologic specimens were reviewed and the treatment plan was compared with the histopathologic diagnosis. The 5-year survival rates were 55% for the primary tumors and 25% for the recurrent tumors. The 5-year survival for the subgroup of small primary tumors (tumor size less than 2 cm) treated with electron beam therapy is 70% as compared with 45% for the same size primary tumors treated by conventional X-ray therapy. Only one of every 6 patients with small, primary tumors treated with electron beam therapy survived. When treated with electron beam therapy as a primary, the survival rate for small (size less than 2 cm) primary tumors was 50%. Electron beam therapy in the treatment of scalp and neck tumors has proven to be a useful technique for low-stage tumors in patients whose performance status is poor.Q: Selenium WebDriver - Maintain only the last session in the entire suite I am a newbie to the WebDriver.
