As we all know, Lightroom Music, the Lightroom mobile apps, and their various ports to compatible platforms are also major upgrades, and all three continue to improve with fairly regular updates. Lightroom also offers lots of interoperability, making it easy to work on files in.PSD,.PNG,.TIFF,.GIF, and many other file formats. It even supports JSON and HTML5 because it has to. I am not sure whether Adobe can still claim that Lightroom is the only desktop photo manager—as it did back when it was initially released—but that hasn't been my impression at all. I am happy to report that I have been using the full Photoshop package since Lightroom 4 was introduced, and the Photoshop apps are still my go-to for most photograph editing. And even with so many options in the new version, it just makes sense to continue to use the creative suite for my needs, as it's already familiar and nimble. iPhone users wanting a new computer starting with OS X may want to check out the Apple MacBook Pro. An iPhone really is cool, but not for everyone.
